OUSD staff are not yet experts in inclusive practices although we are working on our knowledge base of implementing quality special education models.

Discussion:
(QUANTIFY what is being purchased.)

Stetson provides technical assistance through a school by school approach. The training is first offered to school site leaders and then extended to a school based team. The focus is on implementing inclusive practices and offering the least restrictive environment to our students. Stetson entitles their school based approach to inclusive practices as "Step by Step to Inclusion". The approach is meant to evaluate every Individualized Education Program (IEP) to make instructional decisions. This planning is completed in conjunction with the general education teacher so that each student participating is supported to be successful in an inclusive setting. School based teams build a foundation for understanding why inclusive practices and the language describing inclusive practices. The school based team is taken through three design steps, planning for the general education curriculum, the supports the student will need to participate in a general education setting, and is locating a student within the general education classroom the best setting for a particular student. Once school sites participate in the Step by Step training, they also will receive technical assistance at their school site. Stetson consultants, accompanied by an OUSD Special Education staff person go to the school sites to support and review each school sites' implementation plan and progress to date. The OUSD Special Education staff person accompanies the Stetson consultant so that OUSD staff build their knowledge of best practices and how to support school sites working towards more inclusive practices and settings.
