Schools Attuned: At St. Paul's in order to encourage effective self-expression of all students in the classroom, we want to improve the ability of all teachers to work with the unique needs of each student. St. Paul's focus was to study and improve the educational care of all students, and in particular, those students whose learning ability is incompatible with the way they are traditionally taught. Thus, the School implemented a process to become a "School Attuned,, an environment of academic diversity where students with differences in learning are treated with dignity and respect and provided with the tools to work with their disability and become functioning, active members in their classrooms and in our society. Faculty and administrators learn how to recognize learning differences in individual students and develop learning program with the students and their parents to improve student achievement. Also, faculty and administrators develop practices to support many different learning styles in the classroom.

Schools Attuned Consultants: The School will hire two educational care consultants to work with the teachers in recognizing learning differences in their students. They will work with teachers to design and implement accommodations for the students in their classrooms who need them. They will also alert teachers and administrators to updated materials.

Learning and the Brain Conference: This conference further addresses the learning styles of different types of learners by helping teachers understand how students learn and how to optimize the learning environment for all students to maximize understanding and achievement. It also supports the integration of a variety of instructional strategies and techniques. Workshops such as Brain-Based Teaching and Learning; TV's Effects on Learning, Attention and ADHD; Nature of Learning and Memory; Reading and Math Intervention: Training the Brain To Pay Attention; Visual Learning and Language; and Connecting Music, Reading and Math all speak directly to the issues involved with teaching students with a variety of learning challenges, keeping in mind that whatever changes we make for one are often beneficial to all.

Reading Recovery: St. Paul's requires that all students, regardless of their learning challenges, achieve a high level of fluency and proficiency of reading and writing. Many of our students struggle in these areas, which then impacts the rest of their education. St. Paul's has a reading specialist who works closely with our teachers and Educational Care Coordinator. Her job is to provide the intervention necessary for the early readers, thereby reducing the number of underperforming students. She will be developing a program, which will train teachers to work with these struggling readers.

No Bully: For students to obtain academic achievement, they need to feel safe and welcome at the school. No Bully provides schools a way for teachers, administrators and students a way to safely and constructively address student conflict and to develop systems and culture that prevents bullying.

Technology Integration and the CUE Conferences: The growing integration of technology into classroom instruction has become more and more ubiquitous in the school. For our teachers
