Parent Needs:

In meeting and working with the parents of many of our students, they are at a loss for ways to appropriately work with their children. They have requested help in dealing with children in a different environment than they were raised.

Parents are requesting how to help their students with their homework. After parent conferences, and numerous individual conferences with the parents, with teachers and parents, and with the counselor or special needs teachers and parents, we determined a class on helping their children at home would be helpful. Parents of Title 1 students are often frustrated as their students do not seem to be making adequate progress. They reached out to us and have asked for our help. Since the faculty and staff are being trained in social-emotional behavior, we determined that giving the parents the same training would help us work together. We will hire Lori Onderwyser, our trainer for Staff development, to share both the research and tools to help them in their parenting task as they work with their children at home on their daily homework.. Aimed at Title 1 parents, we have scheduled an evening of a light dinner and presentation for these parents. Other parents were not excluded, but special emphasis was placed on inviting Title 1 Parents.
