

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

David Silver
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear OUSD School Board Members and Superintendent,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

See Attached List of Signers as of Feb 11, 2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
2	Christopher Perrius	Oakland	CA	94606	2/6/2015
3	Iman Mills Gordon	Oakland	CA	94602	2/6/2015
4	Jessica Stewart	Oakland	CA	94619	2/7/2015
5	Katherine Welch	Oakland	CA	94612	2/7/2015
6	Sarah Schuppisser	Oakland	CA	94602	2/7/2015
7	Jack Holzman	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
8	Greg Klein	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
9	Jasmin Tow	Oakland	CA	94602	2/7/2015
10	Bo Ghirardelli	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
11	John Baldo	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
12	Jonathon Stewart	Oakland	CA	94619	2/7/2015
13	Mariah Klein	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
14	James Paek	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
15	margaret schultz	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
16	David Castillo	Oakland	CA	94605	2/7/2015
17	Laura Robell	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
18	Rochelle Benning	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
19	Grace Park-Bradbury	Oakland	CA	94618	2/7/2015
20	Randy Weiner	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
21	Nick Resnick	Oakland	CA	94602	2/7/2015
22	Laurie Jacobson Jones	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
23	Jacqueline Soohoo	Newark	CA	94560	2/7/2015
24	Sam Brewer	Castro Valley	CA	94546	2/7/2015
25	Jen Rainin	Oakland	CA	94612	2/7/2015
26	tamika lyles	Oakland	CA	94601	2/7/2015
27	Dr. Tyfahra Singleton, Ph.D.	Oakland	CA	94606	2/7/2015
28	Dr. Rachelle Sallee	Discovery Bay	CA	94505	2/7/2015
29	Mirella Rangel	Oakland	CA	94618	2/7/2015
30	David Simmons	Oakland	CA	94618	2/7/2015
31	David Stein	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
32	Francisco Nieto	Oakland	CA	94618	2/7/2015
33	Amy Omand	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
34	Matt Hurley	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
35	Julie Obbard	Berkeley	CA	94705	2/7/2015
36	David Harris	Berkeley	CA	94705	2/7/2015
37	Ryan Phillips	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
38	Alexandra Bernadotte	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
39	Brian Stanley	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/7/2015
40	Brian Rogers	Oakland	CA	94607	2/7/2015
41	Susan True	Oakland	CA	94612	2/7/2015
42	Edit Ruano	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
43	C.J. Hirschfield	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
44	Jonathan Klein	Oakland	CA	94602	2/7/2015
45	Erin Hagan	Oakland	CA	94619	2/7/2015
46	Amanda Klein	Oakland	CA	94602	2/7/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
47	Hae Sin Thomas	Oakland	CA	94601	2/7/2015
48	Dirk Tillotson	Oakland	CA	94619	2/7/2015
49	Cassidy Jones	Monterey	CA	93940	2/7/2015
50	Jenna Stauffer	Oakland	CA	94605	2/7/2015
51	Anne Soto	Oakland	CA	94612	2/7/2015
52	Concerned Citizen	New City	New York	10956-240	2/7/2015
53	Gloria Lee	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
54	Amy Klein Chojnacki	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
55	Lihi Rosenthal	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
56	Isaac Kos-Read	Oakland	CA	94606	2/7/2015
57	Veronica Churchill	Oakland	CA	94601	2/7/2015
58	Allison Henkel	Berkeley	CA	94705	2/7/2015
59	Jacob Simas	Oakland	CA	94605	2/7/2015
60	Zayani Lavergne-Friedman	Oakland	CA	94606	2/7/2015
61	Carmelita Mills	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
62	Tauny Ruymaker	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
63	Thomas Mills	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
64	Colby Gordon	Oakland	CA	94602	2/7/2015
65	Louise Waters	Oakland	CA	94612	2/7/2015
66	Amie Fishman	Oakland	CA	94602	2/7/2015
67	Cecilia Le	Oakland	CA	94605	2/7/2015
68	maria pelayo	Oakland	CA	94601	2/7/2015
69	Joyce Meyer	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
70	Aurora Barajas	Oakland	CA	94602	2/7/2015
71	Yolanda Cotton-Turner	Oakland	CA	94608	2/7/2015
72	Gina Grammatico	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
73	Elizabeth Lyons	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
74	Beth Sutkus Thompson	Oakland	CA	94618	2/7/2015
75	Robert Spencer	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
76	Cassie Perham	Oakland	CA	94619	2/7/2015
77	LaRika Lee	Oakland	CA	94621	2/7/2015
78	Ana Lara	Oakland	CA	94612	2/7/2015
79	Sikander Iqbal	Oakland	CA	94605	2/7/2015
80	Tommaso Boggia	Oakland	CA	94610	2/7/2015
81	Joanne da Luz	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
82	Quynh-Nhu Truong	Oakland	CA	94606	2/7/2015
83	Jennifer Holmes	Oakland	CA	94611	2/7/2015
84	Jacobo Juarez	Oakland	CA	94606	2/7/2015
85	Rick Gaston	Oakland	CA	94605	2/7/2015
86	Katherine Casey	Denver	Colorado	80203	2/7/2015
87	christina veasey	hayward	CA	94541	2/7/2015
88	Diana Downton	Oakland	CA	94609	2/7/2015
89	Jillian Settle	Oakland	CA	94619	2/7/2015
90	Angela Tsang	Oakland	CA	94618	2/7/2015
91	jovon alexander	Hayward	CA	94544	2/7/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
92	Ilana Golin	Berkeley	CA	94703	2/8/2015
93	Taejin Hwang	Oakland	CA	94612	2/8/2015
94	Cindi Reiss	Oakland	CA	94610	2/8/2015
95	Alison Trumbull	Oakland	CA	94619	2/8/2015
96	Clare Middleton-Dezner	Oakland	CA	94609	2/8/2015
97	Lilly Chou	Berkeley	CA	94720	2/8/2015
98	Allene Warren	Oakland	CA	94605	2/8/2015
99	Michele Davenport	Oakland	CA	94619	2/8/2015
100	Joni Gordon	Oakland	CA	94611	2/8/2015
101	Brenna Randolph	Oakland	CA	94610	2/8/2015
102	D Fuller	Oakland	CA	94605	2/8/2015
103	Kimi Kean	Oakland	CA	94602	2/8/2015
104	Valerie Gurley	Oakland	CA	94601	2/8/2015
105	Julissa Lambert-Yank	Oakland	CA	94609	2/8/2015
106	Julie Wright	Oakland	CA	94618	2/8/2015
107	casey hildreth	Oakland	CA	94602	2/8/2015
108	Karen Hill	Berkeley	CA	94710	2/8/2015
109	Izola Haynes	Oakland	CA	945603	2/8/2015
110	Libby Schaaf	Oakland	CA	94612	2/8/2015
111	Ed gerber	Oakland	CA	94611	2/8/2015
112	Lucia Miller	San Rafael	CA	94903	2/8/2015
113	Laura Kretschmar	Oakland	CA	94621	2/8/2015
114	Charlotte Taylor	Oakland	CA	94611	2/8/2015
115	Alexis Ferrell	Stockton	CA	95212	2/8/2015
116	Michelle Macarai	Oakland	CA	94609	2/8/2015
117	Lauren Wingate	Berkeley	CA	94705	2/8/2015
118	kathleen Albers	Oakland	CA	94611	2/8/2015
119	Barbara Denainke	Oakland	CA	94610	2/8/2015
120	Sarah Blain	Oakland	CA	94602	2/8/2015
121	Sarah Mujahid	Berkeley	CA	94704	2/8/2015
122	Sara Sens	Oakland	CA	94609	2/8/2015
123	Julayne Virgil	Oakland	CA	94605	2/8/2015
124	Darby brandli	Oakland	CA	94606	2/8/2015
125	Fred Shelton	Oakland	CA	94619	2/8/2015
126	Casey Farmer	Oakland	CA	96409	2/8/2015
127	Timothy West	Oakland	CA	94621	2/8/2015
128	Gina Tomlinson	Oakland	CA	94611	2/8/2015
129	Katherine Carter	Somerville	Massachusetts	2143	2/8/2015
130	Jessica siebert	Oakland	CA	oakland	2/8/2015
131	Vanessa Daniel	Oakland	CA	94612	2/8/2015
132	Gail Salvador	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/8/2015
133	Ayugi Davis	Oakland	CA	94605	2/8/2015
134	Judy Porat	Oakland	CA	94618	2/8/2015
135	Tamara Bishop	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/8/2015
136	Matt Neely	Seattle	Washington	98112	2/8/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
137	tristan janeiro	oakland	CA	94602	2/8/2015
138	Addisu Demissie	Oakland	CA	94618	2/8/2015
139	Allison leslie	Memphis	Tennessee	38111	2/8/2015
140	Katherine Falk	Oakland	CA	94611	2/8/2015
141	Barbara Ferguson	Oakland	CA	94602	2/8/2015
142	Adam Hathaway	Oakland	CA	94606	2/8/2015
143	Nicole Gossage	Oakland	CA	94606	2/8/2015
144	Lisa haynes	Oakland	CA	94605	2/8/2015
145	Jack McAboy	Oakland	CA	94610	2/8/2015
146	Laura Flaxman	Oakland	CA	94610	2/8/2015
147	Scout Sanders	San Francisco	CA	94110	2/8/2015
148	Jan Caine	Oakland	CA	94618	2/8/2015
149	Abida Al aswad	Oakland	CA	94610	2/8/2015
150	cynthia nelson	Oakland	CA	94611	2/8/2015
151	Bruce Haines	Oakland	CA	94610	2/8/2015
152	Cindy Lawrence	Oakland	CA	94602	2/8/2015
153	Lisa Griffin	Oakland	CA	94609	2/8/2015
154	Priscilla Carson	Oakland	CA	94618	2/8/2015
155	Janet Young	Oakland	CA	94618	2/8/2015
156	Donna Smith-Harrison	Oakland	CA	94618	2/8/2015
157	Mary gaston	Oakland	CA	94605	2/8/2015
158	Shreyas Cholia	Oakland	CA	94609	2/8/2015
159	Greg Sterling	OAKLAND	CA	9.46E+08	2/8/2015
160	Sarah Elbeck	Alameda	CA	94501	2/8/2015
161	Vivian pacheco	San Francisco	CA	94112	2/8/2015
162	William Nee	Oakland	CA	94606	2/8/2015
163	Alison Hanson	San Francisco	CA	94110	2/8/2015
164	Melissa Castro	Oakland	CA	94621	2/8/2015
165	Damon Grant	Oakland	CA	94605	2/8/2015
166	Diana Romo-Nichols	Oakland	CA	94612	2/8/2015
167	Stephanie McGraw	Oakland	CA	94618	2/8/2015
168	Susan Haley Varat	San Francisco	CA	94118	2/8/2015
169	Alicia Walker	Oakland	CA	94621	2/8/2015
170	Alyssa Chen	Oakland	CA	94607-283	2/8/2015
171	Leo Fuchs	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
172	Michelle Deiro	Alameda	CA	94501	2/9/2015
173	maria garcia	Oakland	CA	94621	2/9/2015
174	Safia Quinn	Oakland	CA	94619	2/9/2015
175	Sonya Mehta	Saratoga	CA	95070	2/9/2015
176	Jamie Treacy	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
177	Erin hanley	El Sobrante	CA	94803	2/9/2015
178	Lorena Cabello	Oakland	CA	94618	2/9/2015
179	Susan smyth	Oakland	CA	94611	2/9/2015
180	Kirsten Grimm	Oakland	CA	94612	2/9/2015
181	Kallie Berg	Hayward	CA	94541	2/9/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
182	Sharice Wynn	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
183	Wanda Peake	Berkeley	CA	94705	2/9/2015
184	Sarah Frankfurth	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
185	Curtiss Crossley	Park Forest	Illinois	60466	2/9/2015
186	Jessica Stewart	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
187	Estella Romo	Watsonville	CA	95076	2/9/2015
188	Kate mccarthy	Oakland	CA	94605	2/9/2015
189	Megan Macpherson	Berkeley	CA	94703	2/9/2015
190	Adam Weber	Hood River	Oregon	97031	2/9/2015
191	Mary Prime-Lawrence	Oakland	CA	94605	2/9/2015
192	Cheri Gillies	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
193	Ida Oberman	Oakland	CA	94606	2/9/2015
194	Kara Duros	Oakland	CA	94619	2/9/2015
195	Monica Valerian	Oakland	CA	94616	2/9/2015
196	William Zeier	El Sobrante	CA	94803	2/9/2015
197	zahira khan	hayward	CA	94545	2/9/2015
198	Maureen Lee	San Francisco	CA	941002	2/9/2015
199	Jesus Contreras	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
200	Paul Leo	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
201	Mia Georgiu	Oakland	CA	94619	2/9/2015
202	Megan Hatschek	Carmichael	CA	95609	2/9/2015
203	Natasha Middleton	Oakland	CA	94619	2/9/2015
204	Tony Emerson	Oakland	CA	94607	2/9/2015
205	Michael Fauteux	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
206	Sarah Roth	San Rafael	CA	94903	2/9/2015
207	Carina Vazquez	American Canyon	CA	94503	2/9/2015
208	Tess O'Brien	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
209	Victoria Chavez	Oakland	CA	94605	2/9/2015
210	Doran Morgan	Alameda	CA	94501	2/9/2015
211	Michelle Myers	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
212	Caitlin Hunter	Berkeley	CA	94710	2/9/2015
213	Tracy kimball	Oakland	CA	94611	2/9/2015
214	francesca Austin	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
215	Robert Donnelly	Oakland	CA	94612	2/9/2015
216	Carrie Rodich	Oakland	CA	94605	2/9/2015
217	Stephanie Lin	Oakland	CA	94607	2/9/2015
218	Hope Wood	Oakland	CA	94606	2/9/2015
219	gabrielle rosi	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/9/2015
220	Amalia castanon-hill	Oakland	CA	94611	2/9/2015
221	Florence Eriksson	oakland	CA	94611	2/9/2015
222	cat h	San Francisco	CA	94121	2/9/2015
223	Peter Laub	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
224	Meredith Irby	Oakland	CA	94609	2/9/2015
225	Kristen Wilson	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
226	Lucy Schmidt	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
227	Katherin Suyeyasu	Oakland	CA	94618	2/9/2015
228	Frantascia Price	Oakland	CA	94606	2/9/2015
229	Jane Funk	Oakland	CA	94619	2/9/2015
230	Erin Kollings	Oakland	CA	94606	2/9/2015
231	Kevin King	Oakland	CA	94603	2/9/2015
232	Jamal Fields	Oakland	CA	94612	2/9/2015
233	Jennifer Sales-Sorto	Oakland	CA	94603	2/9/2015
234	Jessica Lawrence	Oakland	CA	94605	2/9/2015
235	Stephen Shepard	Oakland	CA	94606	2/9/2015
236	Janelle JOnes	Hayward	CA	94544	2/9/2015
237	fred strauss	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
238	Charleen Calvert	Berkeley	CA	94703	2/9/2015
239	Terry Boom	Oakland	CA	94606	2/9/2015
240	Amy Savage	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
241	Larissa Adam	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
242	Dana Wellhausen	Oakland	CA	94608	2/9/2015
243	Leah Rubin	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
244	Cedric Bedford-Chalale	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
245	Ruby Kane	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
246	chelsea Torgersen-Bell	Oakland	CA	94611	2/9/2015
247	Anayvette Martinez	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
248	Louis Willacy	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
249	Renae Waneka	Berkeley	CA	94705	2/9/2015
250	Liz Solis	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
251	Kathleen Gilbert	Oakland	CA	94619	2/9/2015
252	Mathilde Andrejko	Oakland	CA	94618	2/9/2015
253	Tiffany Lee	Oakland	CA	94612	2/9/2015
254	Beth Tyler	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
255	Amreet Waters	Oakland	CA	94621	2/9/2015
256	Peter Kim	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
257	Judi Yeager	Oakland	CA	94606	2/9/2015
258	Cynthia Suter	Oakland	CA	94607	2/9/2015
259	Morgan Alconcher	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
260	Janine Chen	Sunnyvale	CA	94085	2/9/2015
261	Jo-Ann & John Donivan	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
262	Lynne Rosen	Oakland	CA	94606	2/9/2015
263	Rhonnel Sotelo	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
264	Corinne Petit	Berkeley	CA	94703	2/9/2015
265	Marc Tafolla	Oakland	CA	94606	2/9/2015
266	Christina Greenberg	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
267	Truman Braslaw	Oakland	CA	94603	2/9/2015
268	Celia Garcia Alvarado	Oakland	CA	94612	2/9/2015
269	Taylor Garland	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
270	Macarena Valenzuela	Oakland	CA	94603	2/9/2015
271	Annamarie Simmons	Oakland	CA	94612	2/9/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
272	Charles Cole, III	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
273	Juan Carlos Garcia	Oakland	CA	94619	2/9/2015
274	Antmen Mendoza	Oakland	CA	94606	2/9/2015
275	Richard Pelayo	Oakland	CA	94612	2/9/2015
276	Sarah Feldman	Alameda	CA	94501	2/9/2015
277	Truong Gia	Houston	Texas	77077	2/9/2015
278	Jessica Diaz	San Francisco	CA	94110	2/9/2015
279	Patricia Barragan	Oakland	CA	94605	2/9/2015
280	Andrew Garland	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
281	David Silver	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
282	dupree gant	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/9/2015
283	Donovan Reid	Berkeley	CA	94709	2/9/2015
284	Saleema Fazal	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
285	Noah Frigault	Elk Grove	CA	95758	2/9/2015
286	melissa estrada	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
287	Aditi Raychoudhury	Oakland	CA	94608	2/9/2015
288	Rivkah Beth Medow	Oakland	CA	94609	2/9/2015
289	Annette Miller	Oakland	CA	94607	2/9/2015
290	Hannah Crisler	Ann Arbor	Michigan	48103	2/9/2015
291	Nikolitsa Paranomos	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
292	Jose Luis Martinez	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
293	maria barragan	Rancho Cordova	CA	95670	2/9/2015
294	Cassandra Lopez	Oakland	CA	94609	2/9/2015
295	Noah Bradley	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
296	Eleanor Boli	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
297	Adrienne Sanford	Richmond	CA	94805	2/9/2015
298	Edward Dieden	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
299	Leah Johnston	Oakland	CA	94609	2/9/2015
300	Kathleen Dieden	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
301	Cullen Frandsen	Oakland	CA	94611	2/9/2015
302	bose adewusi	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
303	Neda Said	Oakland	CA	94605	2/9/2015
304	Tracy Session	Oakland	CA	94609	2/9/2015
305	Ryan Chapman	San Francisco	CA	94115	2/9/2015
306	Cindy Downing	Oakland	CA	94619	2/9/2015
307	Jill Bond	Berkeley	CA	94702	2/9/2015
308	Kim Arnone	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
309	kuasi imata	Clovis	CA	93612	2/9/2015
310	Renato Almanzor	Oakland	CA	94619	2/9/2015
311	susan alice montgomery	OAKLAND	CA	94602	2/9/2015
312	Ryan Kiesel	Oakland	CA	94609	2/9/2015
313	Harriet Saunders	OAKLAND	CA	94602-203	2/9/2015
314	emily johnson	OAKLAND	CA	94611	2/9/2015
315	Maryam Majidy	Oakland	CA	94611	2/9/2015
316	Meena Deo	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
317	Lisa Nessian	Oakland	CA	94619	2/9/2015
318	Lucy Krebsbach	Brooklyn	New York	11205	2/9/2015
319	Edward Nold	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
320	Lynzi Ziegenhagen	Oakland	CA	94612	2/9/2015
321	Heather Yuen	Oakland	CA	94602	2/9/2015
322	Bonnie Forbes	Oakland	CA	94611	2/9/2015
323	Arcelia Gonzalez	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
324	Jennifer Reichert	San Leandro	CA	94578	2/9/2015
325	Joice Toyota	Stanford	CA	94305	2/9/2015
326	Sheryl Adam	Oakland	CA	94610	2/9/2015
327	Tiffany Zhou	San Francisco	CA	94103	2/9/2015
328	Jean Stein	Oakland	CA	94609	2/9/2015
329	deborah johnson	Oakland	CA	94601	2/9/2015
330	Rebekka Sullender	San Francisco	CA	94103	2/9/2015
331	Ciji Saso	San Francisco	CA	94117	2/9/2015
332	Lisa Rothbard	San Francisco	CA	94110	2/9/2015
333	Scott Morgan	Alameda	CA	94501	2/10/2015
334	Nathan Randall	San Francisco	CA	94114	2/10/2015
335	Jessica Wheeler	Stanford	CA	94305	2/10/2015
336	Tessa Strauss	Oakland	CA	94609	2/10/2015
337	Mark Hurty	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
338	A Paschal	Oakland	CA	94612	2/10/2015
339	Junia Kim	Mountain View	CA	94043	2/10/2015
340	Dejen Gebru	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
341	Meaghan Henry	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
342	Sierra Thai-Binh	Alameda	CA	94501	2/10/2015
343	Joe Vasquez	San Francisco	CA	94122	2/10/2015
344	Jenny Ingram	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/10/2015
345	Abigail Kaster	Oakland	CA	94619	2/10/2015
346	Margaret Brenner	San Francisco	CA	94110	2/10/2015
347	JANE MENDOZA	Oakland	CA	94619	2/10/2015
348	Elise Gresch	San Francisco	CA	94110	2/10/2015
349	gabriel padilla	San Leandro	CA	94577	2/10/2015
350	Caroline Conlon	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
351	Brian Greenberg	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
352	George Dallas	Palo Alto	CA	94306	2/10/2015
353	Paulette Smith	Castro Valley	CA	94546	2/10/2015
354	Lakiesha Thomas	Suisun City	CA	94585	2/10/2015
355	Charles Marks	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
356	Jennifer Adam	Manhattan Beach	CA	90266	2/10/2015
357	Hazel Jay	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
358	eduardo medina	San Francisco	CA	94109	2/10/2015
359	Kristen McCaw	San Jose	CA	95126	2/10/2015
360	lynn delaney	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
361	Carrie Douglass	Oakland	CA	94612	2/10/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
362	Bernardo Palomares	Oakland	CA	94603	2/10/2015
363	Lissa Hines	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
364	Diane Mack	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/10/2015
365	Amy McGeorge	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
366	Steven Elliott	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
367	Winter Williams	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
368	Nicki Fox	Oakland	CA	94608	2/10/2015
369	Erica Fishler	Oakland	CA	94609	2/10/2015
370	Aisha Blackwell	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
371	Michael Barr	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
372	Chelsea Williams	Oak Park	Illinois	60302	2/10/2015
373	Elizabeth Padilla	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
374	anne mccormick	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
375	Chris Kang	San Bruno	CA	94066	2/10/2015
376	Julia andrews	Richmond	CA	94804	2/10/2015
377	Jennie Herriot-Hatfield	San Francisco	CA	94107	2/10/2015
378	Jack Cohen	Berkeley	CA	94709	2/10/2015
379	Ama Bloom	Oakland	CA	94619	2/10/2015
380	Kristel Emmer	Philadelphia	Pennsylvania	19146	2/10/2015
381	G Reyes	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
382	Amy Rodriguez Bolar	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
383	Geraldine Sonobe	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
384	Henning Hohnhold	San Francisco	CA	94117	2/10/2015
385	Kaitlin Lewis	San Francisco	CA	94102	2/10/2015
386	Kimberly Mosley	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
387	Scott Gaiber	San Francisco	CA	94117	2/10/2015
388	Bob Carpino	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
389	Steve Cohn	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
390	Elka Chamberlin	San Francisco	CA	94102	2/10/2015
391	Patryce Ealy	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
392	Ike Enahoro	Oakland	CA	94606	2/10/2015
393	Brenda Usher-Carpino	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
394	Clayton Virgil	Hayward	CA	94542	2/10/2015
395	Courtney Ruby	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
396	Sam Davis	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/10/2015
397	Amy Gao	San Francisco	CA	94110	2/10/2015
398	Sheila Menezes	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
399	John Salvador	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
400	Bruce Nye	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
401	Ethan Treesara	San Francisco	CA	94110	2/10/2015
402	dana harvey	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
403	LaDenna Eglin	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
404	Angela Aquino	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
405	Laura Tobben	Oakland	CA	94609	2/10/2015
406	Ella Marra-Ketelaar	Portland	Oregon	97214	2/10/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
407	Amy Saxton	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
408	von haynes	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
409	Rosie Papazian	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
410	Sharon McGaffie	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
411	Colm Davis	Oakland	CA	94606	2/10/2015
412	Somnang Sin	Oakland	CA	94606	2/10/2015
413	Kimberly Wayne	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
414	Danyelle murrell	Oakland	CA	94619	2/10/2015
415	Khadijah Byrd	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
416	Karen Ridley	Oakland	CA	94619	2/10/2015
417	Judith Wheaton	Oakland	CA	94621	2/10/2015
418	Carolyn Himes	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
419	Greg Behm	Bedford	Ohio	44146	2/10/2015
420	Mariana Garcia	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
421	Lillianna Torres	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/10/2015
422	Daniel Schmitz	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
423	Kendra Barnes	Oakland	CA	94603	2/10/2015
424	Scott Douglasd	Oakland	CA	94612	2/10/2015
425	Rachel Friedman	Oakland	CA	94609	2/10/2015
426	Kelle Quane	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
427	Amata Small	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
428	Lindsay Maple	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/10/2015
429	Sara Salvaggio	Albany	CA	94706	2/10/2015
430	Meccah Coleman	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/10/2015
431	pamela briskman	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
432	Odiaka Gonzalez	Oakland	CA	94606	2/10/2015
433	Craig Wallace	San Francisco	CA	94115	2/10/2015
434	Katia Hazen	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
435	Maddie Orenstein	Palo Alto	CA	94301	2/10/2015
436	Rosa Gutierrez	Pittsburg	CA	94565	2/10/2015
437	Bridget Daly	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
438	Jeannie Celestial	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
439	David Roe	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
440	Howard Feight	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/10/2015
441	Courtney Walker	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
442	Jethro Rice	Alameda	CA	94501	2/10/2015
443	Steve Jubb	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
444	Juli Bryant	Oakland	CA	94612	2/10/2015
445	Jaquisha cowan	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
446	Peter Fiske	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
447	Ashley Decena	San Jose	CA	95136	2/10/2015
448	Ben Kornell	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
449	Adam Miller	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
450	Ebony Smith	Vallejo	CA	94591	2/10/2015
451	Wendy Adams	Redmond	Washington	98053	2/10/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
452	Michael Bull	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
453	Samir Bolar	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
454	natalie weeks	Dublin	CA	94568	2/10/2015
455	Angela Le	San Francisco	CA	94103	2/10/2015
456	Sean Murphy	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
457	Rafael Sands	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
458	Allison Slater	San Francisco	CA	94117	2/10/2015
459	Sundar Chari	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
460	Madeline Burchard	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
461	Christina Dawkins	Oakland	CA	94606	2/10/2015
462	Pamela Watson	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
463	Shandle McCormick	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
464	Jeannie Valkevich	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
465	Shawn Rorke-Davis	Phoenix	Arizona	85012	2/10/2015
466	Allison Martin	Los Angeles	CA	90049	2/10/2015
467	Nancy D. River	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
468	Gladys Rivera	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
469	Paula Ambrose	Oakland	CA	94612	2/10/2015
470	Ismael Plasencia	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
471	Laura Gonzalez	Berkeley	CA	94702	2/10/2015
472	Avi Zellman	Oakland	CA	94603	2/10/2015
473	Cassandra Tesch	El Cerrito	CA	94530	2/10/2015
474	Joanna Wong	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
475	Lisa Winner	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
476	Chadwick Spell	Oakland	CA	94619	2/10/2015
477	Brittany Age	San Diego	CA	92139	2/10/2015
478	Nadine Argueza	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
479	Esther Pearl	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
480	Lauren Hamilton	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
481	Eve Shapiro	San Francisco	CA	94103	2/10/2015
482	Nam Nguyen	Atlanta	Georgia	30313	2/10/2015
483	Jessica Costy	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
484	Alexandra Bernadotte	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
485	Linda Spencer	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
486	Danyce Henslick	Corona	CA	92882	2/10/2015
487	Sonny Rose	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
488	Kathy Hatzke	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
489	janae fine	Concord	CA	94520	2/10/2015
490	Julie Chanter	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
491	Joy Breed	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
492	David Copenhafer	New York	New York	11222	2/10/2015
493	Sheridan Estacio	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
494	Keisha Ghee	Oakland	CA	94619	2/10/2015
495	Alexandra Wong	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
496	Sana Farooq	Manhattan Beach	CA	90266	2/10/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
497	Lucy Streett	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
498	Kelly resnick	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
499	Kelly Kirkpatrick	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
500	Jazmin Betancourt	Oakland	CA	94606	2/10/2015
501	mike chiappetta	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
502	Shawn Acree	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/10/2015
503	Rebecca Riseman	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
504	Mailisha c	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
505	Jim Puskar	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
506	Ruby Geballe	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
507	Fiona mcauliffe	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
508	Mary Elizabeth Sullivan	Oakland	CA	94606	2/10/2015
509	Jeffrey Franey	El Cerrito	CA	94530	2/10/2015
510	Rosemarie Thoenig	Newton	New Jersey	7860	2/10/2015
511	Minh-Tram Nguyen Oakland	Oakland	CA		2/10/2015
512	Ken Berrick	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
513	Alejandra loza	San Lorenzo	CA	94580	2/10/2015
514	Joline Castaneda	Oakland	CA	94601	2/10/2015
515	Myrtha Muse	Oakland	CA	94609	2/10/2015
516	Melissa Yoches	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
517	Catherine Baxter	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
518	Melissa Castro	Oakland	CA	94613	2/10/2015
519	Katherine Schwartz	San Rafael	CA	94901	2/10/2015
520	Dewanna Slaughter	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
521	Jason Rivera	San Francisco	CA	94117	2/10/2015
522	Jamilah Sanchez	oakland	CA	94606	2/10/2015
523	Jessica Tucker	San Leandro	CA	94577	2/10/2015
524	Christina Sabater	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
525	Christine Sotelo	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
526	Edward Givens	Oakland	CA	94606	2/10/2015
527	Lolita Jackson	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
528	Ana Rosa Jauregui	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
529	Linzy Gustafson	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
530	Jessica Weiss	Hayward	CA	94542	2/10/2015
531	Alita Sanchez	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
532	Laila Jenkins-Perez	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
533	Herrera Cecile	Alameda	CA	94501	2/10/2015
534	Rupaom Dev	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
535	Ernest Martin	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
536	Simone Brodner	Oakland	CA	94607	2/10/2015
537	Rodrigo Prudencio	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
538	Burt Alper	Oakland	CA	94618	2/10/2015
539	Diana Jauregui	Oakland	CA	94605	2/10/2015
540	Tammy White	Oakland	CA	94602	2/10/2015
541	Brad Howard	Lafayette	CA	94549	2/10/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
542	Suzanne Vyborney	Oakland	CA	94610	2/10/2015
543	Lara Sidhu	Oakland	CA	94606	2/10/2015
544	Amy Ortega	Oakland	CA	94611	2/10/2015
545	Sapna Thottathil	Oakland	CA	94619	2/11/2015
546	Ellen Khalifa	Oakland	CA	94619	2/11/2015
547	Arantxa Alvarez	Oakland	CA	94602	2/11/2015
548	DIANE GOLDSMITH	UKIAH	CA	95482	2/11/2015
549	elizabeth schlosser	el sobrante	CA	94803	2/11/2015
550	Maria Ronquillo	San Leandro	CA	94577	2/11/2015
551	Natisha Demko	San Francisco	CA	94122	2/11/2015
552	Leticia Galyean	Oakland	CA	94607	2/11/2015
553	Brandon Nicholson	Oakland	CA	94610	2/11/2015
554	Christina Angelos	Oakland	CA	94606	2/11/2015
555	Drew Lau-Regent	Oakland	CA	94619	2/11/2015
556	Jay Stack	Emeryville	CA	94608	2/11/2015
557	Eunhye Kim	Emeryville	CA	94608-235	2/11/2015
558	Mario Valadez	American Canyon	CA	94503	2/11/2015
559	Rich Crandall	Seattle	Washington	98125	2/11/2015
560	Juliana Kornell	San Carlos	CA	94070	2/11/2015
561	Kathy Quintanilla	Oakland	CA	94610	2/11/2015
562	Sophie So	Oakland	CA	94618	2/11/2015
563	Jean Higgins	Oakland	CA	94602	2/11/2015
564	Sean McClung	Oakland	CA	94609	2/11/2015
565	Evan Miller	Oakland	CA	94602	2/11/2015
566	Kate Alessi	Oakland	CA	94611	2/11/2015
567	Araceli Ruiz	Oakland	CA	94603	2/11/2015
568	Toni Brandy	Oakland	CA	94603	2/11/2015
569	cristina preciado	San Leandro	CA	94577	2/11/2015
570	Aimee Owens	Oakland	CA	94621	2/11/2015
571	Jess Box	Berkeley	CA	94709	2/11/2015
572	Dr. Vera Nobles	Oakland	CA	94619	2/11/2015
573	Rebecca Damico	Claremont	CA	91711	2/11/2015
574	Anne Parris	Oakland	CA	94610	2/11/2015
575	Paul Byrd	Oakland	CA	94601-295	2/11/2015
576	Alexander Heald	Oakland	CA	94610	2/11/2015
577	Angelica Pacheco	Oakland	CA	94601	2/11/2015
578	Andrea Muchin	Oakland	CA	94602	2/11/2015
579	Kris Starr-Witort	Berkeley	CA	94703	2/11/2015
580	Krystal Nzoiwu	Oakland	CA	94621	2/11/2015
581	Jessica Newburn	Oakland	CA	94605	2/11/2015
582	Kendra Collins	Oakland	CA	94618	2/11/2015
583	Max Coleman	Oakland	CA	94603	2/11/2015
584	Ebony Winters	Castro Valley	CA	94546	2/11/2015
585	Rik Sm	Oakland	CA	94611	2/11/2015
586	Emma Coufal	Oakland	CA	94610	2/11/2015

	A	B	C	D	E
1	Name	City	State	Zip Code	Signed On
587	Chenie Escober	San Lorenzo	CA	94580	2/11/2015
588	Sally Van Etten	Oakland	CA	94611	2/11/2015
589	Damali Robertson	Hayward	CA	94541	2/11/2015
590	Rachel Nicholson	Oakland	CA	94619	2/11/2015
591	Vijay Mehrotra	San Francisco	CA	94117	2/11/2015
592	Dwayne Aikens	Oakland	CA	94606	2/11/2015
593	Jaci Cervin	Avondale	Arizona	85323	2/11/2015
594	Nicole Nelson	San Rafael	CA	94901	2/11/2015
595	tina chang	Oakland	CA	94611	2/11/2015
596	LaKiesha Golden	Oakland	CA	94619	2/11/2015
597	Darrell Sprewell	Oakland	CA	94605	2/11/2015
598	ECCLESTON WAINWRIGHT	Oakland	CA	94605	2/11/2015
599	Sheila Bharucha	Berkeley	CA	94703	2/11/2015
600	rebecca deutsch	oakland	CA	94610	2/11/2015
601	Kaya Sattva	Oakland	CA	94618	2/11/2015
602	Keri Butkevich	Richmond	CA	94805	2/11/2015
603	Lois Walker	San Leandro	CA	94577	2/11/2015
604	Mario castellon	San Rafael	CA	94903	2/11/2015
605	Shyam Patel	Oakland	CA	94619	2/11/2015
606	Cheryl Narvaez	Oakland	CA	94601	2/11/2015
607	Carl Pascual	Oakland	CA	94601	2/11/2015
608	linda vazquez	Oakland	CA	94621	2/11/2015
609	LaShawn Route Chatmon	Oakland	CA	94610	2/11/2015
610	Amairani Juarez-Mendez	Oakland	CA	94601	2/11/2015
611	Renee Bartlett	Oakland	CA	94602	2/11/2015
612	Mari Rodriguez	Berkeley	CA	94704	2/11/2015
613	Alan Wesson	Oakland	CA	94619	2/11/2015
614	Vivian Miranda-Amen	Sacramento	CA	95842	2/11/2015
615	Colleen Cambra	Oakland	CA	94619	2/11/2015
616	Shanna Jones	Oakland	CA	94605	2/11/2015
617	Katye Crawford	Oakland	CA	94601	2/11/2015
618	Jackie Graves	Oakland	CA	94603	2/11/2015
619	Rosario Duenas	Oakland	CA	94601-372'	2/11/2015
620	Nimi tarango	Oakland	CA	94610	2/11/2015

Support Quality Schools for All Oakland Students

Comments

- Change is hard, and we have to stand strong and work through the tough parts together. The easy solutions have already been tried.
- These 2000 kids, their families and their teachers deserve support and options. They may have had change in the past, but they deserve agency and resources to chart a new path.
- Every child in Oakland deserves a high quality school!
- I believe all our students deserve an excellent education.
- I'm a former OUSD teacher, an Oakland parent, Oakland edu reformer and social entrepreneur -- our teachers and children deserve better.
- "2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available."
- Let's work together to get Oakland's strongest leaders transforming the educational landscape for 2,000+ of our students.
- Oakland's children deserve the highest quality education.
- I strongly support Superintendent Antwan Wilson and his call for quality schools.
- I'm signing this petition because the students of Oakland Unified School District have a constitutional right to a
- fair, equitable, rigorous education. They deserve the resources and materials that will prepare them for future jobs that have not been created. They need teachers who are technologically savvy, understand culture and diversity, and are current on researched based strategies and techniques that focus on multiple intelligence and I was an awesome teacher in Oakland and quit because of the low pay
- OUSD teachers deserve to have everything they need to ensure kids can succeed. I believe every child deserves a high quality education
- I believe that EVERY child deserves to attend a school that prepares them for college, career, and life success. I also believe in civility and respectful discourse as the path forward. We cannot "out shout" and "out insult" each other out of these challenges. Our community deserves better. Our children deserve better.
- I think teachers should get a raise and we should go all out to make our schools great. We owe it to our kids to work hard--together--to find solutions.
- Every child should get to be encouraged, educated, and inspired by his or her school in this country. Quality schooling is the key foundation to our future
- I want every child in Oakland to get a great education!
- I live in Oakland and have a 2-year-old daughter I want to send to great public schools like I attended growing up - and want us all to live in a society where that's true for EVERY CHILD no matter their zipcode.
- I want to raise my kids in Oakland and have them attend an AMAZING public school!!!
- I'm signing because I support Oakland teachers who receive the least amount of pay in the Bay Area and serve the most challenging community. I'm signing because even though the district has (finally) come to the table with wage increases, they are not enough to stop the exodus of talent to neighboring districts. I
- Superintendent Wilson deserves the community's support as he tries to address one of the most important civil rights issue of today.
- I believe in equity of education for all students especially low income students. They deserve to have a quality education. They are the future of our society. I'm a student teacher wanting to make a difference in the education system.

- Having worked in one of the five intensive support schools for 7 years, Castlemont, I know how hard the work is, and I know the extra support that the students and educators in these schools need.
- I believe in the importance of education to our families, communities, and the movement for social justice in this country. In addition to the points made in this letter, I believe that our school systems need bold leadership for innovation. We must radically re-imagine learning and teaching to achieve equity and keep apace with the global world.
- I am signing because my son's have great Oakland teachers who do so much for them. I care about the quality of Oakland schools for all.
- I am a Glenview parent and I am an outstanding teacher who stays in Hayward USD because of the salary. I care about high quality Oakland schools.
- I think it is important to show our children that we are constantly trying to improve regardless of the past
- Test scores be damned! My neighbors' children deserve the best education that Oakland Unified can provide for them. East Oakland has been neglected for far too long. The students at Fremont High School deserve REAL change to support them in their academic development. Now.
- Nothing is more important than giving ALL Oakland children a great education.
- I support my friends who are teachers in the Oakland school system, the friends who are parents of kids in that school district and for the betterment of all the Oakland school children and their futures, for their RIGHT to improved public education now.
- I support quality in Oakland schools.
- I attended highschool in both North and East Oakland and there is a huge difference concerning funding and materials. Fortunately the staff at the lower funded school truly cared about our growth and progression, they did an outstanding job making sure we were prepared for graduation and thereafter. They fought hard for us constantly experiencing cuts and often paying for materials with their own money. These schools need all the help they can get they deserve it to ensure better future's for their students'.
- Teachers need raises
- I care about Oakland teachers and children
- Our City's future depends upon a high-quality and equitable school district.
- I believe strongly that school communities can serve students better if they have decision making over critical areas such as their budget, staff, and curriculum.
- I want to see the dynamic of education change for low income students in Oakland.
- All kids, all schools, deserve the right to teach/administer in a way that fits the students and community.
- My son is at Peralta Elementary School and his teachers work very hard and they need a raise!
- Oakland schools need support and teachers need support and incentives to invest in Oakland's children
- I am proud graduation of the Oakland Public Schools and a former member of the Board (86-87) My child's education is happening NOW! Schools, teachers and students need our help.
- All options must be thoroughly vetted before a decision is made. Taking any option off the table at this time is not fair to the families who attend OUSD schools.
- The future opportunities of our youth is being compromised
- I'm sick to death of education getting a lot of lip service about its importance, and nothing else backing that up. A good education is expensive, get over it or watch more kids fall through the cracks!
- I'm signing because better pay and hard caps on class sizes will keep our awesome teachers in OAKLAND. Kids need this now!
- I am a grateful parent whose children had amazing teachers in an Oakland public school. Oakland needs to pay its teachers well. They need a pay raise.

- As a former special Ed teacher in OUSD, I know the importance of a reasonable wage in keeping a school district viable. If our best and brightest young teachers are leaving for other districts where the pay is better, we are shooting ourselves in the foot. Oakland continues to carry too many administrators at the district office level. Clear out the deadwood and pay the TEACHERS what they are worth!
- I want Oakland teachers to get a raise. They are underpaid relative to other districts. They have a tough assignment.
- I support quality schools for every child in Oakland!
- Because I support OUSD teachers. I have also created similar petition; it would be great if folks signed this as well. Together, we can work to support our wonderful teachers.
- I'm signing because school based decision making has been a critical ingredient in our students' growth, academically and more broadly as future leaders.
- I was an Oakland teacher for 9 years. Please do what is right for Oakland teachers and Oakland students.
- There is a direct relationship between performance and adequate pay. My kids will enter OUSD and I want their teachers to be happy
- my husband is an Oakland school teacher and we just had to move out of Oakland in order to afford a place to live. I'm signing because I'm an advocate of public schools. The only thing better than a safer Oakland is a safer Oakland with better schools. Our teachers deserve better.
- As a teacher in Oakland, I know that our students, our parents, and our teachers deserve better. The whole community needs to work together to find solutions that will improve our schools and, most importantly, student outcomes.
- I have a daughter who is about to start public school in Oakland this year, and I want her to have great teachers. Oakland teachers deserve the support.
- Come on Oakland, do the right thing!!
- I'm signing because we need a systemically aligned push to provide the needed high quality seats for our children in Oakland. Our families deserve nothing less more do we.
- Our Children need us to act now to save their lives. This is a matter of national security. Our Nations People must be healthy and educated in order for us to be safe from ourselves and others.
- I want a better future for Oakland students and teachers!
- The right factors are in place to make enduring change for kids of color in Oakland. Let's make the most of this moment.
- I'm signing because I'm an Oakland teacher and this matters for our kids.
- I believe Oakland kids and families deserve the best educational experience out there and that includes high quality (highly paid) teachers, and a degree of choice about what school is best suited to their needs and dreams. I believe in fair pay for teachers.
- Teachers play the most important role in the lives of our students. We need to improve salaries and education in Oakland so fewer people will send their kids to the privates - we will get better teachers with more competitive salaries.
- We just moved to Oakland and my son will be starting kindergarten in the fall. I want him and all of the kids in our community to have a good education.
- Oakland kids matter!
- I love Oakland's youth
- I know that the voice of our school communities - including the families and teachers of our children - matters. We need to work together to support our schools
- The inequalities in Oakland schools are appalling.

- I am a former Educator and have seen first hand the affect bad teachers have on our students! Students should always be the first priority and they are not!
- A collaborative effort to improve Oakland schools for everyone and open minds to cooperate to get this important work done together is needed.
- All students in Oakland deserve to attend a high-quality school where communities are engaged, teachers are well supported, and leadership is strong. Let's keep the focus on what the students and families at these five schools need—we can do better!
- I'm an educator, an administrator, and a parent. Education is a top priority of any civilized society!
- I am a product of the Oakland Public Schools who received an excellent education fifty years ago. I returned to Oakland and taught in the Oakland Public Schools for 38 years and gave others an excellent education. So I know it is possible. Things have deteriorated and this trend needs to be reversed. Respecting the teachers and paying them a decent wage for the overwhelmingly hard task they face every day it's the number one solution so I am happy it is in first place on this petition.
- Improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve
- 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.
- As an Oakland public school parent, I want for all students what I want for my own kids: the opportunity to learn and be inspired every day in a great school environment. These 2,000 students and their families deserve our undivided support.
- I'm signing because I believe parents and teachers can create and run schools with a specific curriculum
- I care deeply about high quality schools for our students and community. We can't leave kids in low-performing schools. We just can't.
- Our children in Oakland have the ability to change our community if given a chance through quality education.
- All students deserve access to a quality education. There also needs to be a safe environment for dialogue at the - School Board meetings.
- I'm signing because I support quality education for all students and I don't feel that adult issues should supersede the needs of children.
- I'm signing because we have a real chance to significantly impact the educational opportunities for Oakland's students. Success will only be reached if we work together. Please say "no" to status quo, and "yes" to innovation. Above all, let's keep the dialogue respectful, so we can honor our neighbors with positive intentions, and be an example for our students.
- I believe that all Oakland students deserve to learn in a quality school (both district and charter).
- Coming from Oakland public schools myself and understanding the struggles of our public schools then and today, I want children from my community to have the best education they deserve.
- Let's ALL work together with respect. We can do this! I support the educational development of youth
- We have so much going for us here in Oakland - talent, commitment and community passion. Let's take this opportunity to lift our ALL our public education boats.
- I support comprehensive education for all students! These schools are overdue for intentional change!
- I grew up in Oakland, went to school in Oakland, work with the at risk youth in Oakland until 2012, and always felt we needed to work in our education problem. I support a better plan of education for the future generations to come to a city I care a lot. Even though I am not leaving in Oakland I believe it is a great place but something really needs to be done regarding the education of the kids in Oakland.

- I stand with the superintendent in his call for quality schools.
- This is critical for the life of our city. We owe this to our children. Everyone benefits from a well educated society.
- Quality education for all matters. Period.
- teachers who can live in community are an investment notwithstanding ties. I believe our students and teachers need all our support!
- Teachers and Students deserve better
- All students deserve a great education.
- Our children deserve better! (Founding parent of Think College Now)
- I was apart of the team that was working towards great gains before Tony Smith destroyed our progress.
- I have been volunteering in OUSD elementary libraries for 17 years, and I want to see ALL libraries staffed and full of books!
- I'm signing because I believe that, despite some differences in the way we hope to achieve success, we all want the same successes for Oakland students and families. However, we won't be able to move our schools and our community forward until we can find authentic and productive ways of listening to and engaging with one another around these very complex issues. The status quo is unacceptable. I support collaborative efforts to improve our schools.
- I support Superintendent Wilson. It's the right thing to do.
- As a teacher, I'm signing this petition because autonomies allow us to most effectively serve our communities, not only do schools deserve support but the students do, and raises? Hah, even if we ask for that, will we even get it? Oh well, that's a nice perk too.
- I grew up in the OUSD and I absolutly agree with the message!!
- I teach at a school in Oakland that has been able to support students because it has been allowed autonomy first through the small schools movement, and now through our status as a public charter. Students, families, and teachers deserve to have a voice in how their schools run, and should receive the best possible support so that we can help our students succeed.
- Oakland students deserve great schools!
- I'm signing because I believe all students deserve to a high quality education that prepares them to succeed in college and beyond.
- I think teachers in oakland are underpaid
- I agree with all of these things. I taught in Oakland for 7 years. I love our kids in the Fruitvale.
- I'm signing because I valuse and respect the vision for change in Oakland. Superintendent Wilson speaks with urgency and commitment to all students, and that laser focus can scare people vested in the status quo. I urge community partners to listen with heart and mind, and to be open to the future of Oakland.
- I believe every student will thrive and reach their full potential. Paulette Smith, Principal
- I am signing because something different needs to take place for Oakland students. What OUSD is doing has not worked for my community since I was a student in the 1980's.
- school.
- My child goes to Envision Academy of art and technology. our atudents matter!
- I believe that the education system in Oakland needs to be reexamined. What we have been doing hasn't been working. I believe that partnering with charters will allow our students to thrive, our educators to be better compensated, and public schools to maintain their independence.
- My teenagers attend/attended Oakland Military Institute and Envision Academy.

- As an Oakland teacher, I sign because I want to support students and teachers in healthy learning communities. It's important!
- I am an educator and I know better schools are possible.
- I'm a teacher in Oakland, and I believe all our students deserve an excellent education. All adults in Oakland need to work together to make that happen.
- Give teachers a contract as soon as possible and support our community to create quality schools as soon as possible. I'm so glad we were able to pass Measure N, now let's reap those benefits
- The key to a better world is a great education for all our children.
- I'm signing this because we all should be angry and concerned if our students are underperforming, regardless if they are in our public schools or charter schools.
- Superintendent Wilson could do for OUSD. He deserves civility, gratitude and a real shot. I'm dismayed at the level of discourse and want him to know he has supporters who live, vote, and soon will send their child to OUSD schools. Best,
- I am supporting because I believe all of our schools should be quality schools.
- My child attends school in OUSD, and I believe in the 4 areas Superintendent Wilson is striving for. I support equity in education for all OUSD students.
- I live in Oakland. And from oakland our school deserve. The best for our children future
- Im supporting the youth in Oakland
- I am a graduate of Oakland Public schools and I know first hand how important education is to our future leaders. Investing in our teachers means investing in our youth.
- I live in Oakland and want the best schools for our children.
- I am signing because Oakland Public School Students have always been near and dear to my heart! I have taught at many OPSD schools. Together we can make our schools better!!!!!!!!!!
- I believe that supporting our children is our highest priority.
- I am signing because all students in OAKLAND need great, well paid teachers!!
- We need to raise the tone of public discourse in Oakland because our kids are watching us. I support the Superintendent's efforts to ensure quality choices for all students.
- I'm signing because I know these recommendations can be turned into school transformation. We've done it before, now it's time to finish the job.
- I'm signing because I want children to get the best education they deserve.
- My brother is a student of Envision Academy and has made great improvements academically. Everyone should care.
- I believe in quality public schools for ALL students. I work with these teachers
- All kids in Oakland deserve a high quality school and an excellent education.
- My children attended school in Oakland. I was fortunate our neighborhood school was one of THE best. Not just by Oakland standards but by any high educational measure. I want that for all Oakland students. They deserve it and the families and community will benefit immensely.
- We can't wait any longer to improve our schools...this is a serious equity issue and we need to act quickly too fix it. Our Teachers and Students deserve it. Additionally, as an African American professional, I've been disheartened by the level of disrespect shown our AA Superintendent...grown-ups, please, let's model civil discourse and respect - he deserves at least that.
- Oakland students deserve the best! Currently, teachers have incentive to go to other school districts to earn more money or move out of the classroom entirely. We need change!!

- I am signing this because transformative education begins with transformative dialog.
- I am an Oakland educator. I was born and raised in Oakland and care deeply about providing quality education to the children in our community.
- I'm signing this because my daughter, as well as her friends and neighbors, deserve the best education possible. There is too much money in the bay area for this to even be a problem. Do what is right by our students and pay the teachers what they deserve.
- Equality in education is the top issue in creating social and economic equality in this country.
- I have 2 children at OUSD. Their teachers are incredibly dedicated and have fostered a love for learning that will continue for years to come. I don't want my teachers distracted because they need to be looking for better paying teaching jobs. The board should honor their commitment to education by valuing our teaching staff. Since the Superintendent took a 12% pay raise I expect that our teachers should be able to get a living wage.
- I believe all children deserve a quality education.
- Every child in Oakland deserves a quality education and a high-quality school!
- I grew up in Oakland and was an Oakland teacher for two years and could come back to the district eventually. We need experienced, quality teachers in our schools!
- I have two children in public elementary school in OUSD- 1st and 3rd grades. It is beyond my comprehension how our teachers - the people we trust to prepare our children for the complex future that awaits them - are the lowest paid teachers in the country! Please do the right thing for these dedicated men and women - even if it means making cuts in other areas. Teacher pay should be at the top of the priority list!
- my child's teachers are impactful and are molding the future of each child in our school
- my daughters are college grads who attended OSD elementary school - Crocker Highlands. That foundation from
- Crocker gave them the tools they needed to excel in college and now excel in the workforce!
- I am signing. Because I have 6 children who went throughout ousd and I have 1 in college, 2 in a small character school, 1 in jr high and 2 in elementary. And over the last 7 years the quality of our teachers have declined and right now ousd is not producing a good product. I love OUSD but we need teacher who want to teach. Give higher pay and then you teach our children. How about teach because it will give our children a better future! I believe in our district and I pray that we can get it together or Oakland will continue to have a low graduation rate. HELP!!!!!! A volunteer for Sankofa and a concerned parent. Thank you
- The people to whom we entrust our kids should be the best, and the way to get the best teachers is to pay them well. Cut administrator salaries and raise teachers' pay.
- I have 3 kids in Oakland's schools. I support the great teachers and school and I want to continue to make sure my kids get the best education possible.
- It is time for a change in Oakland Unified School District, teachers are overworked and underpaid!!
- I am signing because I believe in Superintendent Wilson's vision that high quality schools are needed for our students and who cares if it is a public charter or public school.
- I have raised 4 children in Oakland, I was lucky that my kids got into an excellent elementary out of our neighborhood. All children deserve schools like that, not just privileged white kids!
- We have had to move to private schools because our schools could not support our daughter's learning effectively. I don't want this to be the case for more students and for families that can't afford the private option. Teacher compensation is part of meeting student needs!
- I believe all students in Oakland deserve access to a high-quality school and the district's new initiatives aim to directly expand high-quality schooling options.

- Education should be a priority for all.
- If (TEACHERS) was being paid what they are worth, they can be more involved with the student's education and family support for those who are struggling.
- Oakland teachers deserve MORE!!!
- My husband is a teacher in San Francisco and wants to teach in the city where we live (Oakland) but the pay cut would be too much for us to handle.
- I am signing because every child deserves access to a high-quality public education. I not only believe this to be possible in Oakland, but I believe that Oakland could become an example of what this can look like in an urban setting today in the U.S.
- I care about students in Oakland Schools.
- Our Oakland Youth have Voices, we need to listen and to hear what they have to say about their education, they are the leaders that matter.
- As an educator for over 30 years, I can say that students and teachers alike need love, respect, and knowledge.
- We are failing our kids in providing the best education possible. The kids are our future and we should treat them that way not an afterthought.
- Oakland's children deserve quality schools, and our city needs to support them!
- Teachers deserve better pay, we deserve bold thinking and innovative out the box solutions to the learning environment. Parents and staff encompassing the school communities deserve and need to have a voice in the decisions that effect their schools directly and freely without hesitation and with respect and tolerance to all subject no matter easy or hard. Oakland needs real solutions and realistic expectations to help remodel its system.
- Our children went to Oakland Public Schools and it is way past a time for change. Every child deserves the best possible education!
- I'm signing because my daughter is an OUSD student and because our teachers create a huge amount of unrecognized value for our community, far in excess of what they are paid. This pay raise is needed. Period. I'm a former OUSD teacher from a low performing school and I know how badly these changes are needed! Support of family and friends in oakland
- I am signing because I believe teachers are as important as doctors when it comes to the health of children. I am in support of Charter Schools and the quality of education given to children in urban areas.
- I am a parent of two Oakland Schools
- For a better education for all Oakland kids specially my two kids!
- I'm signing because I want to support teachers who do so much for our community.
- I received a quality education from Oakland Public Schools 50 years ago. I hope today's students get the same chance.

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Eleanor Boli
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Adrienne Sanford
Richmond, California 94805

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Edward Dieden
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Leah Johnston
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kathleen Dieden
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cullen Frandsen
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

bose adewusi
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Neda Said
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Tracy Session
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

dupree gant
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Donovan Reid
Berkeley, California 94709

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Saleema Fazal
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Antmen Mendoza
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Richard Pelayo
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sarah Feldman
Alameda, California 94501

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Truong Gia
Houston, Texas 77077

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jessica Diaz
San Francisco, California 94110

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Patricia Barragan
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Andrew Garland
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Noah Frigault
Elk Grove, California 95758

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

melissa estrada
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Aditi Raychoudhury
Oakland, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rivkah Beth Medow
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Annette Miller
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Hannah Crisler
Ann Arbor, Michigan 48103

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Nikolitsa Paranomos
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jose Luis Martinez
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

maria barragan
Rancho Cordova, California 95670

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cassandra Lopez
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Noah Bradley
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ryan Chapman
San Francisco, California 94115

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cindy Downing
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jill Bond
Berkeley, California 94702

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kim Arnone
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

kuasi imata
Clovis, California 93612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Renato Almanzor
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

susan alice montgomery
OAKLAND, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ryan Kiesel
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Harriet Saunders
OAKLAND, California 0

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

emily johnson
OAKLAND, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Maryam Majidy
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Meena Deo
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lisa Nesson
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lucy Krebsbach
Brooklyn, New York 11205

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Edward Nold
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lynzi Ziegenhagen
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Heather Yuen
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Bonnie Forbes
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Arcelia Gonzalez
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jennifer Reichert
San Leandro, California 94578

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Joice Toyota
Stanford, California 94305

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sheryl Adam
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Tiffany Zhou
San Francisco, California 94103

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jean Stein
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

deborah johnson
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rebekka Sullender
San Francisco, California 94103

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ciji Saso
San Francisco, California 94117

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lisa Rothbard
San Francisco, California 94110

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Scott Morgan
Alameda, California 94501

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Nathan Randall
San Francisco, California 94114

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jessica Wheeler
Stanford, California 94305

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Tessa Strauss
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mark Hurty
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

A Paschal
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Junia Kim
Mountain View, California 94043

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Dejen Gebru
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Meaghan Henry
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sierra Thai-Binh
Alameda, California 94501

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Joe Vasquez
San Francisco, California 94122

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jenny Ingram
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Abigail Kaster
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Margaret Brenner
San Francisco, California 94110

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

JANE MENDOZA
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Elise Gresch
San Francisco, California 94110

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

gabriel padilla
San Leandro, California 94577

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Caroline Conlon
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Brian Greenberg
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

George Dallas
Palo Alto, California 94306

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Paulette Smith
Castro Valley, California 94546

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lakiesha Thomas
Suisun City, California 94585

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Charles Marks
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jennifer Adam
Manhattan Beach, California 90266

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Hazel Jay
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

eduardo medina
San Francisco, California 94109

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kristen McCaw
San Jose, California 95126

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

lynn delaney
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Carrie Douglass
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Bernardo Palomares
Oakland, California 94603

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lissa Hines
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Diane Mack
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amy McGeorge
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Steven Elliott
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Winter Williams
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Nicki Fox
Oakland, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Erica Fishler
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Aisha Blackwell
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Michael Barr
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Chelsea Williams
Oak Park, Illinois 60302

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth Padilla
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

anne mccormick
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Chris Kang
San Bruno, California 94066

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Julia Andrews
Richmond, California 94804

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jennie Herriot-Hatfield
San Francisco, California 94107

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jack Cohen
Berkeley, California 94709

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ama Bloom
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kristel Emmer
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19146

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

G Reyes
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amy Rodriguez Bolar
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Geraldine Sonobe
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Henning Hohnhold
San Francisco, California 94117

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kaitlin Lewis
San Francisco, California 94102

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kimberly Mosley
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Scott Gaiber
San Francisco, California 94117

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Bob Carpino
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Steve Cohn
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Elka Chamberlin
San Francisco, California 94102

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Patryce Ealy
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ike Enahoro
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Brenda Usher-Carpino
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Clayton Virgil
Hayward, California 94542

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Courtney Ruby
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sam Davis
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amy Gao
San Francisco, California 94110

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sheila Menezes
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

John Salvador
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Bruce Nye
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ethan Treesara
San Francisco, California 94110

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

dana harvey
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

LaDenna Eglin
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Angela Aquino
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Laura Tobben
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ella Marra-Ketelaar
Portland, Oregon 97214

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amy Saxton
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

von haynes
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rosie Papazian
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sharon McGaffie
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Colm Davis
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Somnang Sin
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kimberly Wayne
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Danyelle murrell
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Khadijah Byrd
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Karen Ridley
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Judith Wheaton
Oakland, California 94621

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Carolyn Himes
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Greg Behm
Bedford, Ohio 44146

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mariana García
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lillianna Torres
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Daniel Schmitz
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kendra Barnes
Oakland, California 94603

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Scott Douglas
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rachel Friedman
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kelle Quane
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amata Small
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lindsay Maple
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sara Salvaggio
Albany, California 94706

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Meccah Coleman
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

pamela briskman
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Odiaka Gonzalez
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Craig Wallace
San Francisco, California 94115

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Katia Hazen
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Maddie Orenstein
Palo Alto, California 94301

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rosa Gutierrez
Pittsburg, California 94565

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Bridget Daly
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jeannie Celestial
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

David Roe
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Howard Feight
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Courtney Walker
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jethro Rice
Alameda, California 94501

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Steve Jubb
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Juli Bryant
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Iaquisha cowan
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Peter Fiske
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ashley Decena
San Jose, California 95136

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ben Kornell
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Adam Miller
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ebony Smith
Vallejo, California 94591

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Wendy Adams
Redmond, Washington 98053

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Michael Bull
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Samir Bolar
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

natalie weeks
Dublin, California 94568

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Angela Le
San Francisco, California 94103

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sean Murphy
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rafael Sands
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Allison Slater
San Francisco, California 94117

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sundar Chari
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Madeline Burchard
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Christina Dawkins
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Pamela Watson
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Shandle McCormick
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jeannie Valkevich
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Shawn Rorke-Davis
Phoenix, Arizona 85012

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Allison Martin
Los Angeles, California 90049

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Nancy D. River
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Gladys Rivera
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Paula Ambrose
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ismael Plasencia
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Laura Gonzalez
Berkeley, California 94702

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Avi Zellman
Oakland, California 94603

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cassandra Tesch
El Cerrito, California 94530

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Joanna Wong
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lisa Winner
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Chadwick Spell
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Brittany Age
San Diego, California 92139

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Nadine Argueza
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Esther Pearl
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lauren Hamilton
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Eve Shapiro
San Francisco, California 94103

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Nam Nguyen
Atlanta, Georgia 30313

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jessica Costy
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Alexandra Bernadotte
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Linda Spencer
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Danyce Henslick
Corona, California 92882

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sonny Rose
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kathy Hatzke
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

janae fine
Concord, California 94520

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Julie Chanter
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumo Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Joy Breed
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

David Copenhafer
New York, New York 11222

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sheridan Estacio
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Keisha Ghee
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Alexandra Wong
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sana Farooq
Manhattan Beach, California 90266

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lucy Streett
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kelly resnick
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kelly Kirkpatrick
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jazmin Betancourt
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

mike chiappetta
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Shawn Acree
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rebecca Riseman
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mailisha c
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jim Puskar
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ruby Geballe
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Fiona mcauliffe
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mary Elizabeth Sullivan
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jeffrey Franey
El Cerrito, California 94530

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rosemarie Thoenig
Newton, New Jersey 7860

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Minh-Tram Nguyen
Oakland, California

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ken Berrick
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Alejandra loza
San Lorenzo, California 94580

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Joline Castaneda
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Myrtha Muse
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Melissa Yoches
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Catherine Baxter
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Melissa Castro
Oakland, California 94613

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Katherine Schwartz
San Rafael, California 94901

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Dewanna Slaughter
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jason Rivera
San Francisco, California 94117

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jamilah Sanchez
oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jessica Tucker
San Leandro, California 94577

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Christina Sabater
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Christopher Perrius
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Iman Mills Gordon
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jessica Stewart
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Katherine Welch
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sarah Schuppisser
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jack Holzman
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Greg Klein
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jasmin Tow
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Bo Ghirardelli
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

John Baldo
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jonathon Stewart
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mariah Klein
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

James Paek
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

margaret schultz
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

David Castillo
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Laura Robell
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rochelle Benning
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Grace Park-Bradbury
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Randy Weiner
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Nick Resnick
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Laurie Jacobson Jones
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jacqueline Soohoo
Newark, California 94560

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sam Brewer
Castro Valley, California 94546

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jen Rainin
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

tamika lyles
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Dr. Tyfahra Singleton, Ph.D.
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Dr. Rachelle Sallee
Discovery Bay, California 94505

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mirella Rangel
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

David Simmons
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

David Stein
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Francisco Nieto
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amy Omand
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Matt Hurley
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Julie Obbard
Berkeley, California 94705

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

David Harris
Berkeley, California 94705

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ryan Phillips
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Alexandra Bernadotte
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Brian Stanley
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Brian Rogers
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Susan True
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Edit Ruano
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

C.J. Hirschfield
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jonathan Klein
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Erin Hagan
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amanda Klein
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Hae Sin Thomas
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Dirk Tillotson
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cassidy Jones
Monterey, California 93940

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jenna Stauffer
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Anne Soto
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Concerned Citizen
New City, New York 0

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Gloria Lee
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amy Klein Chojnacki
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lihi Rosenthal
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Isaac Kos-Read
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Veronica Churchill
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Allison Henkel
Berkeley, California 94705

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jacob Simas
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Zayani Lavergne-Friedman
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Carmelita Mills
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Tauny Ruymaker
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Thomas Mills
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Colby Gordon
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Louise Waters
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amie Fishman
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cecilia Le
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

maria pelayo
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Joyce Meyer
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Aurora Barajas
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Yolanda Cotton-Turner
Oakland, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Gina Grammatico
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth Lyons
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Beth Sutkus Thompson
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Robert Spencer
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cassie Perham
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

LaRika Lee
Oakland, California 94621

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ana Lara
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sikander Iqbal
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Tommaso Boggia
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Joanne da Luz
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Quynh-Nhu Truong
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jennifer Holmes
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jacobo Juarez
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rick Gaston
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Katherine Casey
Denver, Colorado 80203

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

christina veasey
hayward, California 94541

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Diana Downton
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jillian Settle
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Angela Tsang
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

jovon alexander
Hayward, California 94544

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ilana Golin
Berkeley, California 94703

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Taejin Hwang
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cindi Reiss
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Alison Trumbull
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Clare Middleton-Detzner
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lilly Chou
Berkeley, California 94720

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Allene Warren
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Michele Davenport
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Joni Gordon
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Brenna Randolph
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

D Fuller
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kimi Kean
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Valerie Gurley
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Julissa Lambert-Yank
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Julie Wright
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

casey hildreth
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Karen Hill
Berkeley, California 94710

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Izola Haynes
Oakland, California 945603

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Libby Schaaf
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ed gerber
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lucia Miller
San Rafael, California 94903

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Laura Kretschmar
Oakland, California 94621

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Charlotte Taylor
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Alexis Ferrell
Stockton, California 95212

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Michelle Macarai
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lauren Wingate
Berkeley, California 94705

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

kathleen Albers
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Barbara Denainke
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sarah Blain
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sarah Mujahid
Berkeley, California 94704

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sara Sens
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Julayne Virgil
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumokey Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Darby brandli
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Fred Shelton
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Casey Farmer
Oakland, California 96409

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Timothy West
Oakland, California 94621

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Gina Tomlinson
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Katherine Carter
Somerville, Massachusetts 2143

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jessica siebert
Oakland, California

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Vanessa Daniel
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Gail Salvador
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ayugi Davis
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Judy Porat
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Tamara Bishop
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Matt Neely
Seattle, Washington 98112

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

tristan janeiro
oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Addisu Demissie
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Allison leslie
Memphis, Tennessee 38111

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Katherine Falk
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Barbara Ferguson
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Adam Hathaway
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Nicole Gossage
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lisa Haynes
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jack McAboy
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Laura Flaxman
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Scout Sanders
San Francisco, California 94110

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jan Caine
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Abida Al aswad
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

cynthia nelson
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Bruce Haines
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cindy Lawrence
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lisa Griffin
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Priscilla Carson
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Janet Young
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Donna Smith-Harrison
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mary gaston
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Shreyas Cholia
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Greg Sterling
OAKLAND, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sarah Elbeck
Alameda, California 94501

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Vivian pacheco
San Francisco, California 94112

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

William Nee
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Alison Hanson
San Francisco, California 94110

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Melissa Castro
Oakland, California 94621

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Damon Grant
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Diana Romo-Nichols
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Stephanie McGraw
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Susan Haley Varat
San Francisco, California 94118

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Alicia Walker
Oakland, California 94621

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Alyssa Chen
Oakland, California 0

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Leo Fuchs
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Michelle Deiro
Alameda, California 94501

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

maria garcia
Oakland, California 94621

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Safia Quinn
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sonya Mehta
Saratoga, California 95070

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jamie Treacy
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Erin Hanley
El Sobrante, California 94803

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lorena Cabello
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Susan Smyth
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kirsten Grimm
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kallie Berg
Hayward, California 94541

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sharice Wynn
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Wanda Peake
Berkeley, California 94705

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sarah Frankfurth
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Curtiss Crossley
Park Forest, Illinois 60466

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jessica Stewart
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Estella Romo
Watsonville, California 95076

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kate mccarthy
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Megan Macpherson
Berkeley, California 94703

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Adam Weber
Hood River, Oregon 97031

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mary Prime-Lawrence
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cheri Gillies
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ida Oberman
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kara Duros
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Monica Valerian
Oakland, California 94616

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

William Zeier
El Sobrante, California 94803

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

zahira khan
hayward, California 94545

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Maureen Lee
San Francisco, California 94102

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jesus Contreras
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Paul Leo
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mia Georgiu
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Megan Hatschek
Carmichael, California 95609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Natasha Middleton
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Tony Emerson
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Michael Fauteux
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sarah Roth
San Rafael, California 94903

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Carina Vazquez
American Canyon, California 94503

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Tess O'Brien
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Victoria Chavez
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Doran Morgan
Alameda, California 94501

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Michelle Myers
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Caitlin Hunter
Berkeley, California 94710

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Tracy kimball
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

francesca Austin
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Robert Donnelly
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Carrie Rodich
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Stephanie Lin
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Hope Wood
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

gabrielle rosi
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amalia castanon-hill
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Florence Eriksson
oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

cat h

San Francisco, California 94121

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Peter Laub
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Meredith Irby
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kristen Wilson
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lucy Schmidt
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Katherin Suyeyasu
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Frantascia Price
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jane Funk
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Erin Kollings
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kevin King
Oakland, California 94603

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jamal Fields
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jennifer Sales-Sorto
Oakland, California 94603

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jessica Lawrence
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Stephen Shepard
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Janelle Jones
Hayward, California 94544

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

fred strauss
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Charleen Calvert
Berkeley, California 94703

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Terry Boom
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amy Savage
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Larissa Adam
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Dana Wellhausen
Oakland, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Leah Rubin
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cedric Bedford-Chalale
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ruby Kane
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

chelsea Torgersen-Bell
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Anayvette Martinez
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Louis Willacy
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Renaë Waneka
Berkeley, California 94705

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Liz Solis
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kathleen Gilbert
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mathilde Andrejko
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Aurora Barajas
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Angela Aquino
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear OUSD School Board Members and Superintendent,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

See Attached List of Signers as of Feb 11, 2015

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Laura Tobben
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ella Marra-Ketelaar
Portland, Oregon 97214

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amy Saxton
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

von haynes
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rosie Papazian
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sharon McGaffie
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Colm Davis
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Somnang Sin
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kimberly Wayne
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Danyelle murrell
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Khadijah Byrd
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Karen Ridley
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Judith Wheaton
Oakland, California 94621

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Carolyn Himes
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Greg Behm
Bedford, Ohio 44146

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Mariana García
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lillianna Torres
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Daniel Schmitz
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kendra Barnes
Oakland, California 94603

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Scott Douglas
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rachel Friedman
Oakland, California 94609

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Kelle Quane
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amata Small
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lindsay Maple
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sara Salvaggio
Albany, California 94706

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Meccah Coleman
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

pamela briskman
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Odiaka Gonzalez
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Craig Wallace
San Francisco, California 94115

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Katia Hazen
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Maddie Orenstein
Palo Alto, California 94301

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rosa Gutierrez
Pittsburg, California 94565

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Bridget Daly
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jeannie Celestial
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

David Roe
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Howard Feight
Emeryville, California 94608

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Courtney Walker
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jethro Rice
Alameda, California 94501

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Steve Jubb
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Juli Bryant
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

laquisha cowan
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Peter Fiske
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ashley Decena
San Jose, California 95136

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ben Kornell
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Adam Miller
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ebony Smith
Vallejo, California 94591

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Wendy Adams
Redmond, Washington 98053

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Michael Bull
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Samir Bolar
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

natalie weeks
Dublin, California 94568

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Angela Le
San Francisco, California 94103

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sean Murphy
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rafael Sands
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Allison Slater
San Francisco, California 94117

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Sundar Chari
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Madeline Burchard
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Christina Dawkins
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Pamela Watson
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Shandle McCormick
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jeannie Valkevich
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Shawn Rorke-Davis
Phoenix, Arizona 85012

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Allison Martin
Los Angeles, California 90049

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Nancy D. River
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Gladys Rivera
Oakland, California 94601

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Paula Ambrose
Oakland, California 94612

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ismael Plasencia
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Laura Gonzalez
Berkeley, California 94702

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Avi Zellman
Oakland, California 94603

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Cassandra Tesch
El Cerrito, California 94530

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Joanna Wong
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lisa Winner
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Chadwick Spell
Oakland, California 94619

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Brittany Age
San Diego, California 92139

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Nadine Argueza
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Esther Pearl
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lauren Hamilton
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Christine Sotelo
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Edward Givens
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lolita Jackson
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ana Rosa Jauregui
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Linzy Gustafson
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Jessica Weiss
Hayward, California 94542

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Alita Sanchez
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Laila Jenkins-Perez
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Herrera Cecile
Alameda, California 94501

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rupaom Dev
Oakland, California 94611

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Ernest Martin
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Simone Brodner
Oakland, California 94607

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Rodrigo Prudencio
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Burt Alper
Oakland, California 94618

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Diana Jauregui
Oakland, California 94605

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Tammy White
Oakland, California 94602

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Brad Howard
Lafayette, California 94549

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Suzanne Vyborney
Oakland, California 94610

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Lara Sidhu
Oakland, California 94606

SUPPORT QUALITY SCHOOLS FOR ALL OAKLAND CHILDREN

February 11, 2015

Dear Jumoke Hodge, OUSD Board Director,

I urge you to support the intent and focus of the Call for Quality Schools to improve our lowest performing schools. The status quo is unacceptable. The five Intensive Support Schools serve 2,000 low-income students, a majority of whom cannot read at grade level and will not graduate ready for college or career.

This is a complex process, and will need to be adjusted based on school community contexts. These schools have been through many changes. The most important outcome now is that our students receive a great education. We all share that responsibility.

I write to support your leadership in four areas:

1) Teachers deserve the biggest possible raise. Oakland teachers are among the lowest paid in the country. Teacher turnover harms our students. Let's take the necessary steps to conclude the contract negotiations quickly so that educators can focus on the difficult work of teaching.

2) Schools deserve intensive support for bold transformation when they are struggling. Low-performing schools need the best leadership, experience, and designs available. We should consider every strong option for children and families, both district-run and charter school models. More details need to be presented to the community, but the direction is right.

3) School communities deserve a say in the decisions that matter to their students' success. The power to make decisions about budgeting, staffing, curriculum, and time begins in this process. Families should fully participate in the transformation of their schools. To do so, they need accurate and timely information about successful school models and opportunities to shape a process that works for all.

4) We all deserve respectful communication and dialogue. Dramatic change often arouses strong emotions. But the level of misinformation, disruption, and disrespect from some in the education community is unacceptable. The NAACP has written a letter condemning the shocking conduct toward the superintendent. I urge you to stay strong and continue to create space for dialogue in this process.

All our children in our public schools need your unwavering leadership. This is hard work, and I deeply appreciate your public service.

Sincerely,

Amy Ortega
Oakland, California 94611