Subject: Curriculum Adoption for Advanced Placement Social Studies Courses
(United States, World History and Government - McGraw Hill: New Social Studies Advanced Placement Resources)

Ask of the Board Adoption by the Board of Education of Resolution No. 2425-0044 - Selection and purchase of the following curricular materials:

McGraw Hill Social Studies course materials for High School Advanced Placement History/Social Studies courses, grades 10-12;

1. Bentley Traditions and Encounters (World Studies);
2. Harrison American Democracy Now AP ED (American Government);
3. Brinkley, American History AP ED (United States History).

Background Need for Updated Social Studies Curriculum:
Providing teachers and students equitable access to high-quality, standards-based instructional materials is a responsibility of the school district and a central component of OUSD's strategy to build coherent instructional systems that improve student outcomes, particularly for students from marginalized communities. To meet the strategic plan goal of guaranteeing literacy by 3rd grade and beyond, OUSD has adopted and implemented high-quality materials in elementary and middle school in recent years. Providing this curriculum with aligned professional development and coaching has created greater alignment across schools and access to grade-level, standards-based learning.

Background

In the spring of 2024 OUSD adopted the Teacher Curriculum Institute (TCI) curriculum for social studies courses for grade 10-12. To continue our support of students in developing reading, writing and critical thinking skills needed for college, career and community, we must provide our teachers with high-quality, relevant and engaging curriculum, the ongoing professional development and coaching they need to effectively use the materials. This is true for students who are enrolled in advance placement (AP) social studies courses as well.

The three most common AP social studies courses in OUSD high schools—United States History, World History, and Government—rely on outdated textbooks: World History: Traditions & Encounters (2006), America Past and Present (7th Edition, 2004), and American Government: Continuity and Change (2002). These materials no longer align with current approaches to teaching AP social studies. To fill the gap, teachers often rely on online resources or purchase materials themselves, many of which lack College Board approval, full accessibility to the content for teachers and students. Updating these resources is essential to support teachers and ensure all students are fully prepared for AP exams.

Discussion

Selection Process

In collaboration with high school AP social studies teachers, the Social Studies Coordinator reviewed materials from three publishers. Starting in spring 2024, the team evaluated print and online resources using criteria informed by student and teacher feedback, as well as expert curriculum reviews, to identify the best fit for rigorous and relevant AP instruction across OUSD.

In fall 2024, the committee recommended piloting McGraw Hill AP Social Studies instructional materials in classrooms. Three teachers from two high schools participated in the trial, which began in December 2024, using the materials during their scheduled AP social studies units.

In January 2025, the teacher completed the trial, evaluating the materials for accessibility (both print and digital), rigorous reading and writing opportunities, and a comprehensive digital library of supplemental resources to support instruction and AP test preparation.

Fiscal Impact

The funding for the cost of instructional materials and professional learning will be from LCFF Supplemental & Concentration Carryover and annually from CA State Lottery Funds. The total cost for the purchase of curriculum and the associated professional learning, illustrated below, is $104,397.33.

Advanced Placement

Executive Summary

In spring 2024, the Academics & Instruction team formed a steering committee to evaluate advanced placement social studies materials for AP American Government, U.S. History, and World History. Through a structured review process, including presentations from three educational publishers and assessments using an internal rubric, the committee identified McGraw Hill as the recommended provider for a trial.

In the first semester of 2024, three teachers from two high school AP social studies programs participated in a trial of McGraw Hill Advanced Placement materials. They attended training sessions to navigate the online platform, access content and resources, and integrate assignments seamlessly with Google Classroom.

Materials Review

Context of the materials review The current AP curriculum for U.S. History, World History, and American Government in OUSD relies on outdated textbooks adopted between 2002 and 2006, including World History: Traditions & Encounters (2006), America Past and Present (7th Edition, 2004), and American Government: Continuity and Change (2002). These materials no longer meet College Board standards and do not provide the necessary support for teachers to deliver rigorous, consistent instruction to support students to prepare for the AP exam.

Currently, teachers independently source and vet materials to prepare their instruction, resulting in inconsistent access to information for students. These supplemental resources frequently lack the rigor required to adequately prepare students for the demands of AP coursework and exams.

Materials Review Process and Timeline

The Academics team began engaging the Oakland Unified high school Advanced Placement Social Studies community around adopting materials for high school courses in fall 2023. What follows is a timeline of stakeholder engagements in this materials review and pilot process.

Committee Membership

In collaboration with the social studies coordinator, Advanced Placement Social Studies teachers from Fremont, Skyline and Oakland Technical High School participated in the panel to hear the presentations and review the curriculum from the three participating vendors. Over the summer team members reviewed each curriculum using an internal rubric to assess the quality, rigor and usability.

Criteria for Evaluating Materials

Using data from the surveys and other engagements, and the High School Language and Literacy Framework and Advanced Placement College Board, the committee organizes criteria into four categories for evaluation:

- Curriculum Design
- Student engagement
- Test prep support
- College Board alignment
- Access to rigorous readings
- Primary and secondary sources
- Teacher and student usability

Evaluation of Materials

The teacher team used the above criteria to assess the presentations and resources for the following curriculum vendors.

1. Gale National Geographic
2. Savvas MyWorld Interactive
3. McGraw Hill

Vendor Review Process

Teacher leaders synthesized the criteria from their knowledge of the criteria used by the College Board to approve AP social studies courses. It represents our OUSD hopes for a high quality, framework-aligned curriculum adoption that meets the needs of our diverse students and supports teachers in their long term and daily planning and instruction. We also acknowledge that no single curriculum will be able to meet all criteria, and that ongoing collaboration and teacher input will be necessary to our work.

Content:

Primary and Secondary Sources: McGraw Hill resources for the AP United States, World History and American Government provide an extensive set of multimedia primary sources to support analysis.

Curriculum Design: Backwards-design curriculum can be organized around recurring themes. Inquiry questions create opportunities to draw connections to the present that reflect the content and skills assessed on advanced placement exams.

Student Engagement: Resources can be used to support teachers in making instructional decisions in their lesson planning that are aligned with district goals of elevating student voice in conjunction to providing consistent practice to skills and content knowledge that would be assessed on the advanced placement exams.

Meaningful Assessments: High quality formative and summative assessments with a variety of

DOK and document based question prompts similar to the advanced placement exam and writing prompts. As according to UDL principles, provides for multiple means of expressing learning, i.e. varied culminating projects (not all essays)

College Board Approved: There are consistent opportunities to read complex text. Resources provide opportunities for teachers to plan instruction to support students in grappling with complex text, writing with evidence, and student discourse.

Usability: Teachers and students have access to digital and print resources with ease both on and off campus. Students can access the online platform via clever. Teachers can assign work and readings for students via Google classroom.

Ease of use for Teachers: Teachers have digital access and can assign work to students in Google classrooms. Materials are organized in a way that reflects the content areas required by the college board.

In addition to the deeper review of materials, the social studies coordinator met with AP teachers to learn about their approach to daily instruction in their AP courses, the types of resources they use with students, and the current supports available to them and their students to thrive.

Selection of Materials for Trial

At the end of the 3 vendor presentations, the reviews submitted by the AP steering committee revealed that McGraw Hill AP resources would be a good fit for the current conditions of the participating AP programs for the following reasons;

- Consist access to content online and in print
- Supplemental materials to support test prep
- Writing prompts that mirror the AP exam
- A variety of secondary and primary sources to support deep document analysis
- All materials and content meet the criteria set by the College Board

Fall 2024 Curriculum Pilot

Pilot Timeline and Process

In fall of 2024, the social studies coordinator recruited teachers to participate in a trial starting in December 2024 to January 2025. McGraw Hill provided virtual training for our teachers. During the trial, participating teachers engaged in meetings to get training and support from curriculum providers, share feedback with the larger committee, and reflect on their experiences through an exit interview.

Student and Teacher Reflection Data

As the trial came to an end, the teachers completed a reflection to identify pluses and deltas of each curriculum. The criteria of the pluses and delta reflection process are as follows; Curriculum Design, High Expectations, Student Engagement, Access to Complex Text and teacher usability.

During the trial, The social studies coordinator visited participating advanced placement classrooms to observe instruction and to survey students about their experience with the new materials to compare it with other materials and experiences in their class.

Qualitative Trial Exit Interviews

Participating teachers and students were interviewed to reflect on their experience with the materials. The responses teachers and students made about their experiences working with McGraw Hill materials affirmed our decision to recommend this resource to be adopted by the Board of Education.

Teacher Exit Interview Themes:

Curriculum Design:

- Content is organized to support teaching and learning
- Units are aligned to college board and advanced placement criteria representative of the AP exam

Student Engagement:

- Readings are concise and provide students with text based questions and practice exam questions.
- Consistent intentional opportunities to get students to read, write, think and participate in class discussions.
- Resources to support test preparation and argumentative essay practice.

Access the Complex Text:

- Includes a variety of primary source materials that are built into the units of study.
- Supplemental texts are available
- All readings are grade level appropriate and standards aligned.
- Pictures and graphs also have audio features available.
- Multiple languages offered.

Teacher Usability:

- Materials are organized to reflect the scope and sequence of AP courses.
- Practice questions and writing prompts are integrated in each unit.
- Teachers can assign student work via google classroom.
- Teachers can plan instruction using the digital platform or the hard copy text.
- Supplemental materials are available to support practice test prep.

Student Exit Interview Themes-What I liked most about McGraw HillStudent Engagement:

- Concise Accessible readings
- Images, maps and captions throughout the readings to support context to what they read
- The digital access in addition to having a hard copy text to use in class.
- Students like having test prep access
 - Assigned by the teacher
 - Available for students to further their understanding and prep for in class or prep for the AP exam.

Access the Complex Text:

- "I think it covers information well and is very clear.
- "I liked that there were different sections so I could do the work in parts.

Committee Evaluation of McGraw Hill AP Resources:

Upon review of the artifacts from the curriculum trial, the committee named the following strengths and opportunities of adopting McGraw Hill AP resources:

- Clear alignment with College Board criteria and aligned with AP scope and sequences for each course.
- Consistent opportunities for students to grow as readers, speakers, and writers.
- Helps to create consistency and collaboration of teachers across the district.

The committee also named some weaknesses and risks:

Given the high level of challenge in implementing the curriculum, OUSD would need to invest heavily in teacher professional learning and supports, focused on:

1. Foundational professional development to support teacher access
2. Professional development time devoted to building an advanced placement social studies professional learning community to support consistent teacher practice and establish internal support for AP social studies program.

Final Recommendation

Ultimately, throughout the trial the participating teachers agreed that the McGraw Hill advanced placement materials provide adequate content and supplemental materials to plan meaningful, rigorous learning experiences to prepare students for the AP exam outweigh the weaknesses. Many of the weaknesses can be attended to through ongoing professional learning and collaboration, as well as the feedback offered to the curriculum designers throughout the revision of the next edition of the curriculum.

It is the recommendation to proceed with the adoption of McGraw Hill advanced placement social studies resources for our 10th-12th AP United States, World history and American Government programs, and to begin implementation of these resources in the fall of 2025.

Thank you for the consideration of our proposal.
